Click on the View now button in the catalogue record, seen here:

If off campus, you will be asked to enter your McGill email address and password.

Close the PressReader HotSpot popup window by clicking on the x in the top left corner:
Explore by countries in PressReader by using the corresponding down arrow. Click on a country to view the publications. The numbers indicate how many are available.

Explore by languages in PressReader by using the corresponding down arrow. Click on a language to view the publications. The numbers indicate how many are available.
Explore by categories in PressReader by using the corresponding down arrow. Click on a category to view the publications. The numbers indicate how many are available.

Explore by publication types in PressReader by using the corresponding down arrow. These include magazines and newspapers. The numbers indicate how many are available.

You can also search for a specific title in the search box (top right).
Let’s find today’s Montreal Gazette. Type ‘Montreal Gazette’ in the search box.

There are two different viewing options: Page View and Text View. The page view allows you to see the newspaper or magazine as it was published, while the text view makes it easier to read individual articles.

You can use the bar at the bottom of the PressReader window to browse through different sections of the publication.
Several options are available when in page view, such as printing or listening to articles.

Print one page or a custom area (this brings up an expandable box to highlight a specific area).

Listen to the articles from the built-in voice generator (not a real person).
The three dots found at the top-right corner of the screen offer additional features. For example, you can change the publication date or have an article translated for you.

Issue date will open up a calendar and allow you to select another date. Only the dates that are shaded are available.

Download to device is only available when using the PressReader app (see below).

Create a file to export to Kindle or another eReader.
There is an app for PressReader, and you may see this prompt while you are reading articles in your browser:

For links to this and other apps of interest, visit the Library’s Mobile Apps and Technology Guide: http://libraryguides.mcgill.ca/mobileapps. Choose your operating system from the menu (Android, iOS, or Microsoft). You will find PressReader under the category ‘reading’.

To download issues in the app, you must be on the university network, either on the McGill WiFi, or using the Virtual Private Network (VPN) on your device. You are entitled to download 10 issues per day. The number of issues is re-set every 24 hours, at midnight GMT.

One last thing: Signing up for a PressReader account is not necessary, but it will allow you to create your own list of publications. Look for the sign in option at the top-right of the window. Once selected, follow the instructions for a new user.

Now, it is time to practice your skills and search or browse for a publication of interest. Can you find the collection of hobby magazines? Happy reading!
